

WEEKLY MARKET COMMENTARY

October 6, 2025

WEEK IN REVIEW

Last week's economic data painted a mixed picture of the U.S. economy. August's pending home sales surged by 4%, far exceeding the forecasted 0.2%, signaling continued strength in the real estate market. The labor market also showed resilience, with the Job Openings and Labor Turnover Survey (JOLTS) reporting 7.227 million job openings – higher than expected – suggesting a bullish tone for the month. However, consumer sentiment took a hit, as the Conference Board's Consumer Confidence Index came in lower than anticipated for September, reflecting growing pessimism among consumers. On a more positive note, both the Manufacturing and Services Purchasing Managers Index (PMI) for September surpassed forecasts, indicating ongoing robustness in these key sectors.

WEEK AHEAD

This week brings several key indicators that could shape market sentiment. September's Consumer Inflation Expectations and October's Michigan Consumer Expectations will offer insight into how consumers view the economy and inflation trends. Labor market health will be gauged through initial and continuing jobless claims, both forecasted to rise from previous readings, potentially signaling a bearish shift if the trend persists. Economists will be watching to see if this continues to occur. Investors will also be closely watching the release of the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) Meeting Minutes for clues about a possible rate cut later this month. Additionally, the Energy Information Administration will publish crude oil inventory data, which could influence petroleum prices and broader inflation dynamics.
